5 THINGS TO KNOW

WELCOME TO METRO PHILLY

SAM NEWHOUSE, REPORTER

While it's often overshadowed in American memory by more recent history — World War II, the Cold War, Vietnam — "The Great War" arguably changed global politics in a way that directly led to all of those conflicts. When the U.S. entered WWI in April 1917, three years into what was then the bloodiest conflict ever to erupt in Europe, Philadelphia stepped up and played its part — both the soldiers who fought and died and, back at home, the women who kept factories humming while citizens young and old supported troops with charity kits and by selling Liberty bonds. Local historians shared their insights on Philly's contribution to the war, inside and on metrophilly.us.

SCOTT ASKS THAT BALLOTS BE GUARDED IN RECOUNT

1 Florida Gov. Rick Scott, whose lead has narrowed in the state's U.S. Senate race, filed more lawsuits against local election officials on Sunday, asking a judge to order police to impound voting machines and ballots when they are not in use. On Saturday, a machine recount began in the race between Scott and incumbent Democratic U.S. Sen. Bill Nelson in one of the most closely watched swing-state contests in last Tuesday's congressional elections. By the time the recount was ordered, Scott's lead had shrunk to 12,500 votes, or 0.15 percent, below the threshold under which a machine recount is automatically triggered under state law. Each side has accused the other of trying to subvert democracy in an echo of the drama in the 2000 presidential vote recount that unfolded for weeks in Florida. Another recount was also triggered in the gubernatorial race between Ron DeSantis and Andrew Gillum as DeSantis' lead shrank to 33,700 votes, or 0.41 percent, as of Saturday. Susan Bucher, the Palm Beach County elections supervisor, told CNN on Sunday that it would be "impossible" for the county to meet the Thursday race recount deadline.

MIGRANTS RESUME MARCH TOWARD US BORDER

2 Hundreds of Central American migrants resumed their march north through Mexico on Saturday, en route to the U.S. border, where President Donald Trump has effectively suspended the granting of asylum to migrants who cross illegally. Trump's Friday order, which went into effect on Saturday, means that migrants will have to present themselves at U.S. ports of entry to qualify for asylum and follow other rules unveiled on Thursday that seek to limit asylum claims. "It doesn't matter what rules [Trump's] government imposes, we cannot go back to our countries. I have a bullet in my arm and another in my shoulder. If I go back home, it'd be better for me to go with a casket," said 30-year-old Julio Caesar from Honduras, who declined to give his last name. The caravan, made up mostly of Hondurans, started north again on Saturday morning following a rest of four days in Mexico City. They carried backpacks, blankets and food, many with children in tow, and took the metro and walked to the town of Tepotzotlan. There they were helped onto buses and trucks by authorities.

HERNANDEZ CONVICTION REINSTATEMENT SOUGHT

4 The Supreme Judicial Court in Massachusetts has started a review of a state legal principle that wiped out the murder conviction of former New England Patriots tight end Aaron Hernandez after his suicide. On Thursday, the justices heard arguments from prosecutors as to why convictions shouldn't be erased if those found guilty die before an appellate court has reviewed facts of the trial. Hernandez was convicted on April 15, 2015, of the 2013 death of semi-pro football player Odin Lloyd in North Attleborough. The 27-year-old Hernandez was found dead in his prison cell on April 19, 2017, with his death ruled a suicide. He had been sentenced to life in prison without the possibility of parole. The state's highest court in 2016 refused to change the legal rule in connection with another case, but the Hernandez prosecutors have taken up the cause. Attorney General Maura Healey is supporting the effort of Bristol District Attorney Thomas M. Quinn III, who is seeking to have Hernandez's conviction reinstated. "The current practice ... does not consider the interest of the other parties who have an interest in the outcome," said Quinn.

POLAND MARCH MARKS 100 YEARS OF INDEPENDENCE

5 Poland's eurosceptic leaders marked a century of national independence on Sunday as more than 200,000 people marched through the capital in a parade involving far-right groups and neo-fascist activists from Italy. The march is a focus of debate about whether the ruling Law and Justice Party (PiS) tacitly encourages groups with roots in the fascist and anti-Semitic movements. The party won power in 2015 and Poland has since become increasingly isolated in Europe amid accusations of a tilt toward authoritarian rule. Some marchers in Warsaw chanted "Away with the EU" but there was no sign of white supremacist banners visible at last year's march. Government officials walked at a distance from the main marchers, away from any overt displays of nationalism, and they were kept separate by security forces. "Thank you for coming here, for Poland, and for bringing the white and red [Polish] flag which saw our fathers, grandfathers and great-grandfathers spill their blood," President Andrzej Duda, a PiS ally, said at the start of the march. "There is space for everyone under our flags," he said.

Think you have a concussion? Here's how to handle it

Rothman Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health

ASK ROTHMAN ORTHOPAEDICS AT JEFFERSON HEALTH:

We're in the thick of fall sports, which has the Philadelphia area buzzing with team pride. But this time of year also puts sports-related injuries front and center. Metro had a chat with Stephen Stache, M.D., sports physician for Rothman Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health and Head Team Physician for the Philadelphia Eagles, to shed light on everything you need to know about concussions.

How common are concussions?

The data from the CDC puts it in the millions, and sports-related concussions lead the pack. Managing sports-related concussions is part of what I do every day. It's obviously a hot topic right now in the NFL and in the media. I spend a lot of time working on education for the public so that all types of athletes can really protect themselves. Unfortunately, it's not really a totally preventable condition, but there are certainly things we can do to reduce risk. For example, leagues are instituting changes in an attempt to reduce exposure. In the NFL, that's hitting a defenseless receiver; in youth soccer, it's eliminating heading. These measures will certainly help, but as long as there's contact in sports, there's the potential for concussions.

What should people know?

One of the most important things I talk to people about all the time is just recognizing the symptoms and understanding that if you're experiencing concussion-related symptoms, you need to minimize the risk of additional hits to the head after that. So let's say you're playing flag football and you unintentionally get taken to the ground and hit your head. If you start having dizziness, headache or blurry vision, you need to stop playing and seek medical care. It doesn't necessarily mean you need to go straight to the emergency room, but it does mean that you have signs and symptoms of a concussion and if you get hit in the head again, those symptoms could get worse—and it could take much longer to get better, which can have really negative impacts on your daily life.

So what symptoms should people look out for?

The most common compliant after a concussion is headache; greater than 90 percent of athletes have this complaint. Other common symptoms include blurry vision, problems focusing and dizziness. When you look at that whole constellation and put it all together, it points to a concussion. I use the three strikes rule, meaning you've sustained a hit to the head and also have any two symptoms associated with concussion. If you fit that description, you should be evaluated by a medical professional.

What makes Rothman Orthopaedics at Jefferson Health experts in concussions?

One of the biggest challenges with concussion is that the level of dysfunction can be extremely subtle. There isn't a single diagnostic test that can be done to diagnose it, so it's really about being in tune with those signs and symptoms. It's those symptoms that bring a patient to the office, but it's our team's training and expertise that make sense of them and puts it all together. We're doing focused exams, looking at eye movements, balance and coordination, and doing computer-based testing to understand thinking and processing. This is what really helps solidify the diagnosis and the level of dysfunction.

We're learning that early intervention therapies can actually aid in recovery, so time is definitely of the essence. I'm also a former college football player, so I'm bringing more than my medical expertise to the table. I can relate to athletes because I've been in their shoes.

Extreme 'devil winds' may worsen deadly California fires

At least 23 people have been killed in one of the worst fires in state history.

Crews faced hot, dry "devil winds" as they battled two giant wildfires raging at opposite ends of California on Sunday, including a blaze in the north that is now one of the deadliest and most destructive in the state's history.

At least 23 people have been killed by the Camp Fire that broke out on Thursday northeast of Sacramento and consumed much of the mountain town of Paradise. More than 100 were reported missing. Hundreds of miles to the south, at least two people died in the Woolsey conflagration threatening the wealthy beach community of Malibu, near Los Angeles.

People were reported missing in the fire-scorched area.

The Camp Fire burned down more than 6,700 homes and businesses in Paradise, more structures than any other California wildfire on record, and the death toll, which could rise, also makes it one of the deadliest.

Only the Griffith Park Fire in 1933 and Tunnel Fire in 1991 have claimed more lives.

Several of the bodies discovered earlier this week were found in or near burned-out cars, police have said. The flames descended on Paradise so fast that many people were forced to abandon their vehicles and run for their lives down the only road through the mountain town.

More than 110 people were reported missing in the fire-scorched area, said a spokeswoman for the Butte County Sheriff's office, who declined further comment.

As of Sunday, the Camp Fire had blackened more than 109,000 acres at the edge of the Plumas National Forest. Crews had cut containment lines around about 25 percent of the blaze.

Winds of up to 40 miles per hour were forecast to blow across the area on Sunday.

Gusts of up to 60 mph and 70 mph, the so-called Santa Ana "devil winds," were expected in the Los Angeles area where crews are fighting the Woolsey Fire.

"This is getting bad," said meteorologist Marc Chenard, with the National Weather Service's Weather Prediction Center in College Park, Maryland. "It's nothing but bad news."

The air masses blowing across the western U.S. deserts, including Death Valley toward the coast, are expected to bring the sustained high winds at least through Tuesday, he said. REUTERS

November's Atlantic City casino sweeps

The odds and ends of AC dice dens and slots parlors at winter's start.

A.D. AMOROSI
letters@metro.us

While everything is happily a go for three newly approved Pennsylvania casinos to enter the sports-wagering operations game — including Philly's SugarHouse Casino, which plans to begin taking bets on Dec. 1 — everything continues to be temporary, location-wise, in each of the casinos.

So no one, administratively, wants to talk in-depth about casino sportsbook hot spots until they're ready. So let's head to Atlantic City, where several issues are brewing and winter is coming.

William Hill duels against FanDuel

There's enough room in the Atlantic City casino scene for two big-name sportsbook operators. What there isn't room for is potential plagiarism. To that end, the Jersey subsidiary of Britain's online sportsbook operation giants, William Hill (who service Ocean Resorts Casino), filed a lawsuit against FanDuel Inc. over allegations the latter had copied the former's betting guide wording nearly verbatim.

For such copyright infringement, Hill is seeking unspecified damages and profits the defendant has gleaned from the allegedly copied guide.

FanDuel is truly having a weird time in New Jersey as of late, according to the Legal Sports Report, who recently wrote about one case of FD's refusal to pay victorious late-night bettors, and another where the dueling online giant refused to pay out on a printed ticket during a wager on the recent Oakland-Denver game.

Wrist slap at Hard Rock

Mann Lien, a legendary local strategic casino and Asian marketing executive who once worked for Atlantic City's Tropicana and Hilton hotel-casinos, recently got hired away by the Hard Rock Hotel & Casino Atlantic City. Congrats. Sounds harmless, yes? No. The state's Division of Gaming Enforcement (DGE) hit the Hard Rock with a $5,000 fine because the casino didn't notify the agency of a major employment decision.

Bring on the planes

During Saturday's sold-out Savor Borgata Ultimate Food Experience, several celebrity chefs made appearances, all of whom have longtime interests and restaurants in AC: Geoffrey Zakarian, Michael Symon, Bobby Flay and Wolfgang Puck among them. Puck, the operator, chef and partner of Wolfgang Puck American Grille at the Borgata since 2006, had some interesting solutions as to how Atlantic City could expand its hotel, casino and visitor businesses.

"Don't forget, we were the first ones in Vegas, opening Spago at the Bellagio in 1993, working with the people at MGM, who were very happy with us," said Puck.

Thinking about staying in AC while the shore town weathered its financial storms, and coming out on top in the present, Puck has an idea as to how AC can capture even more visiting dining and gambling dollars: "Expand the airport. Open a new one. It's not so easy to get to," he said.

AC does have Atlantic City International Airport, a joint civil-military airport 10 miles outside of AC in Egg Harbor Township, but it is tiny. "Now that gaming is everywhere, you have got to make it easier and more convenient to get here. It's beautiful. It's on the ocean. But it can be a pain to get here."

WWI's legacy still felt in Philly, 100 years later

A century later, WWI's impact is felt in Philadelphia, but 'The Great War' is still misunderstood.

SAM NEWHOUSE
sam.newhouse@metro.us

It's been a century since "The Great War" permanently changed the world. When it was over, more than 16 million people were dead, 10 million of them soldiers, the rest civilians.

But today, the legacy of WWI is still debated, questioned and misunderstood, and there are many different opinions as to its historic impact on the Philadelphia area.

"In my opinion, the most lasting impact on Philadelphia and the country was the attitude change toward the role of women," said Peter Williams, a local historian and author of "Philadelphia: The World War I Years."

"I think the role women played on the home front and overseas substantially changed the attitudes of many men and women regarding suffrage, especially in Philadelphia."

The city sent thousands of its native sons to fight in trench warfare in Europe after the U.S. entered the conflict in April 1917, many of them never to return.

But stateside, everyone was doing their part, and women, barred from military combat, filled in manufacturing jobs, ran charitable organizations to support soldiers overseas, and served overseas in auxiliary capacities.

"Before the war, women were not considered capable of performing certain industrial jobs. But the shortage of men allowed them into those positions. Suddenly they were working in munitions factories assembling incendiary bullets and artillery shells and at the shipyards as welders," Williams said. "Thousands of women joined the military as nurses, Navy yeomen and female Marines as well as the Red Cross. They served both here and in Europe with dedication, courage and valor. And quite a few lost their lives both as a result of enemy fire and due to caring for those suffering with the Spanish Influenza."

Williams argued that these achievements stimulated the women's suffrage movement, culminating in women gaining the right to vote two years later, in 1920, with the passage of the 19th Amendment.

"Thousands of women joined the military as nurses, Navy yeomen and female Marines as well as the Red Cross. They served both here and in Europe with dedication, courage and valor."

Peter Williams, local historian and author

Other historians have cited the war economy as stimulating Philly's burgeoning manufacturing economy. With 60 percent of Philadelphia's population made up of immigrants during the war, patriotic fervor unified the diverse communities (with the unfortunate exception of German-Americans, some of whom faced ostracism).

Nonetheless, some still question why President Woodrow Wilson chose to enter an overseas war at all. Many supported the U.S. staying neutral in what was seen as a European conflict.

"We really don't know why Wilson made his decision to go to war," said Sahr Conway-Lanz, scholar-in-residence at the History Department of Widener University in Chester, where he delivered a lecture on Nov. 9 during the school's World War I Centennial symposium. "There is still a mystery about Wilson's decision, even after 100 years of study of this, and despite 300,000 documents from the Wilson papers, we still don't really know for sure. It seems very clear Wilson was tortured by this decision to go to war."

Conway-Lanz should know — he curated Wilson's papers for the U.S. Library of Congress. Most historical sources indicate the clearest impetus to war was the sinking by a German U2 submarine of the U.S. passenger ship Lusitania, a neutral ship transporting non-combatants. One hundred American civilians — 27 of them Philadelphians — died. Wilson had previously issued an ultimatum in 1915 that if Germany attacked non-combatant vessels, the U.S. would enter the war.

But in exchange for the deaths of 100 Americans aboard the Lusitania, more than 100,000 American soldiers would die, many of them in just six months of fighting. Historians estimate that 3,000 were from the Philadelphia area, and 1,400 from the city proper. A total of 10,278 Pennsylvanians are believed to have died in the war. Was it really worth it?

"I really think that Wilson did not want to go to war. He laid down his ultimatum in 1915, hoping that the war would end before he had to enforce his pledge," Conway-Lanz said. "This is one of the things I find so interesting that can speak to us today: If you lay down an ultimatum, and you feel it's important to follow through on that threat, as Wilson did, then you give up control over the situation. It really seems like he felt he was being driven toward war."

Keeping the name 'Bub' alive on Veterans Day and every day

Through Bubs collagen, Sean Lake keeps alive the legacy of Glen Doherty, killed in 2012's Benghazi attacks.

JEFF TOMKO
jeff.tomko@metro.us

Sean Lake remembers his best friend Glen Doherty not just as an American hero, but as his Gen-X training partner-in-crime who shared X-Games-level ambitions.

As teenagers growing up near Boston, their plans for world dominance didn't require guns or military strategy, but relied on protein powder and Metamucil consumption in their search for the "fountain of youth."

"Glen always said you could never get enough fiber," Lake recalled. "That's what we would talk about. But in reality, none of that really worked."

Lake's life changed on Sept. 12, 2011, the day Doherty's life ended too soon when the Navy SEAL was among four killed after Islamic militants attacked two U.S. government offices in Benghazi, Libya.

Since then, Lake has made every day — even Veterans Day — a Memorial Day of sorts by honoring Doherty's legacy. Along with business partner T.J. Ferrera, he created a line of collagen supplements, Bubs Naturals (bubsnaturals.com), named after Doherty's SEAL call name.

Year-round, Bubs gives 10 percent of its proceeds to the Glen Doherty Memorial Foundation, the charity Lake helped create to give scholarships to Special Ops members to help them transition to civilian life. And on Veterans Day, Bubs gives 100 percent to GDMF as a tribute to Bub.

"Glen was one of those guys who would always be there for you, no matter the situation," Lake, who now lives in San Diego, said. "Even if you were just moving a couch — he probably wouldn't want to do that — but Glen would always be the first one there helping you."

Lake recalled their '90s adventures resembling more Bill and Ted than "13 Hours," the Ever wonder how you can help your child develop healthy habits?

Researchers at Temple University are conducting a research study to learn more about how improving children's sleep and other health behaviors affects their weight status and overall health.

To be eligible your child must:
Be 8 – 11 years old

Sleep 9.5 hours or less each night

All families will learn how to improve their child's sleep. Some families will also learn strategies for improving eating and activity behaviors. Families who are eligible and enroll in the study will be compensated for their time.

2016 film based on the Benghazi attacks that also took the lives of fellow SEAL Tyrone Woods as well as U.S. Ambassador Chris Stevens and Sean Smith. "Too many stories to mention," he said.

One episode was their cross-country journey to Alaska. Lake, a top-level snowboarder, and Doherty, a talented skier, quickly found jobs gutting fish to make ends meet — then quit 2½ hours later. "We got paid, looked at each other as if [to ask] what should we do next, and decided, 'Let's go to San Francisco,'" he said.

They lived for the moment during those times, but had an agreement: If they didn't turn pro by age 24, it was time to move on.

Lake became a pro snowboarder. Doherty's path turned quite different. A group of military friends he began training with convinced him he had what it took to become a Navy SEAL. "It's the last thing I ever expected from him," Lake admitted.

Doherty went on to serve nine years in Iraq and Afghanistan, then went on to work with the CIA. Even though they had parted many times before, and every mission was dangerous, Doherty's final goodbye en route to Libya seemed different.

"It didn't feel right," Lake said. "It was almost like we knew this was the last time we were gonna see each other. It still hurts to even think of it."

Through Bubs, Lake is able to keep Doherty's legacy moving forward. The idea, he admits, wasn't a long process, but an accidental dose of tough love provided by his marathon-running wife. "She tossed me a tub of collagen, saying, 'You're not getting any younger,'" Lake said.

After studying the benefits of collagen — the body's most abundant protein — relieving joint pain, improving skin elasticity, and even improving digestive health, Lake knew Doherty would approve of his best friend's idea for Bubs. "I said, 'Damn! This is what Glen would've wanted.'"

LET ME GET TO MY SEAT!
I attend a lot of theater and I can't believe how often this happens: I go to take my seat and the people in the row do not want to get up and let me in! They are slow to rise and give you a look like you asked them for change. If you are that feeble, you shouldn't be at a Broadway show. Stay home and watch TV, or buy seats all the way against the wall so no one will ask you to get up and let them in. And you should definitely not take your seats 20 mins. before curtain if you are sitting in an aisle seat!! These same people give you the same look at intermission when you dare to ask them to let you out...incredible!

THERE'S NO NEED TO PASS ME ON THE ESCALATOR. IT'S ALREADY GOING UP!
Why do some people insist on weaving in and out of people on escalators, especially when there's a staircase nearby? Escalators are for moving stationary people. You're not getting there quicker, you're just being impatient and/or rude.

Aries Don't leave anything unfinished. Others will be watching and judging you, so walk the straight path. A personal change should entail a healthier lifestyle. Romance is highlighted.

Taurus Use your knowledge, experience and expertise to get ahead. A business partnership is favored, but be sure to draw up a contract that specifies who is responsible for what.

Gemini Change begins within. Consider how you feel about what you do for a living and with whom you spend your time. Make adjustments that will ease stress.

Cancer Take a serious look at your relationships with others. Consider how to best improve situations that have been tense. Offer suggestions and be receptive to compromise.

Leo Speak up and get things done. Investments, real estate, home improvements and contracts are favored. Reveal your intentions and make a commitment to a loved one.

Virgo Don't overspend. Concentrate on networking and sharing your ideas. Refuse to let your personal life interfere with your work responsibilities.

Libra Consider your needs and make alterations that will improve your health. Diet and exercise along with laughter and having fun with friends are encouraged.

Scorpio Stick to what and who you know. Anger will set you back, so try to avoid it. Patience will be required when dealing with personal health, financial and emotional matters.

Sagittarius Keep everything in perspective. If you overreact or make too many promises, you will end up facing questions you may not want to answer. Stick to the truth and live within your means.

Capricorn Push forward until you reach your goal. A unique approach will help you attract attention, but don't take credit for someone else's idea. Give credit where credit is due.

Aquarius A change to the way you earn your living or how you handle your money will lead to greater security. Put your energy where it counts.

Pisces Don't share personal information with someone who has trouble keeping a secret. Be discreet and helpful to those who have been there for you in the past. EUGENIA LAST

Leah Remini's Scientology series tackles Jehovah's Witnesses in new special

The actress-turned-activist sets her sights on another religious organization's practices.

ANDREW HUSBAND

The third season of A&E's "Leah Remini: Scientology and the Aftermath" doesn't premiere until later this month. In the meantime, the hugely popular (and controversial) docuseries is airing a new special about Jehovah's Witnesses this week at the request of its fans. "I thought Jehovah's Witnesses were just nice people knocking on doors," the actress says in a promo. However, she continues, the show has "received many letters" asking them to "please look into the Jehovah's Witnesses." So they have.

In "Leah Remini: Scientology and the Aftermath: The Jehovah's Witnesses," Remini and co-host Mike Rinder, also a former Scientologist, take the same format used for the show's first two seasons and apply it to the millenarian restorationist Christian denomination that boasts over eight million members worldwide. These numbers are roughly in the same ballpark as the Church of Scientology's, which, depending on the source, range from eight to 15 million across the globe. Unlike the show's primary target, however, the new special's focus is a much older organization that dates back to the mid-19th century.

So what should viewers expect from Remini's new special? Much of the same, if they're already familiar with the program's first two seasons. She and Rinder sit down with ex-Jehovah's Witnesses to discuss the group's practices and beliefs and the negative impacts these have had on its members, past and present. These formal interviews and roundtables are punctuated by brief dramatic reenactments of scenes described by the interviewees.

As is usually the case with these types of shows, anyone expecting a "smoking gun" or a massively shocking series of revelations will most likely be disappointed. Then again, as is the case with "Scientology and the Aftermath" seasons 1 and 2, the Jehovah's Witnesses special is more about taking a lot of factual and anecdotal information and condensing it down into a single, digestible chunk.

Whether or not the show's approach to its new topic is "fair" remains to be seen. Like with its focus on the Church of Scientology, the program's latest special will most likely draw criticism from members of, or those sympathetic to, the Jehovah's Witnesses religious organization. But chances are pretty good that audiences will learn something new.

and social experiences they're missing out on by not commuting to an office every day. We spoke with Paul MacCartney, chief learning officer at MentorcliQ, about how employee mentorship can combat loneliness among remote workers.

It seems as though more people these days want to work remotely. But what some people might not understand is the loneliness and isolation that can bring. What first alerted you to this phenomenon?

It's interesting, because a recent Gallup poll showed that 43 percent of the workforce in the United States works out of the office at least part of the time. That number is up a whole lot. Ten years ago, I was in a role where I was traveling a lot for work internationally. I could be in three different continents in four weeks. You had to do that because that's how you built the relationships and the face time without the office culture and day-to-day interactions with co-workers, working from home can lead to increased depression and anxiety for some workers.

By offering counseling via Skype or phone, remote-counseling company MentorcliQ aims to give remote workers the mentoring and all of those kinds of things. With the advent of the technology that we are all now familiar with, it really has shifted the very nature of work, and we're all experiencing that. Using myself as an example, 10 years ago, I would be traveling up to 50 percent of the time. Now I have two domiciles and one of my domiciles sits in the same city as our corporate headquarters. I find that, even when I'm in that same city and I'm 1.1 miles away from the corporate office, I still work from home a couple days a week!

The reason we all leverage that trend of being able to work remotely is because you can get more stuff done. There's a benefit of being able to work remotely, and that's why a lot of people are doing. The downside that we are all expereincing, is that it is a different dynamic. It's not the same if you don't have the face time. You do have to offset some of those downsides of working remotely either full-time or part-time. We became aware of it with the rest of the U.S. and global workforce, and have definitely seen the mentoring aspect and mentoring automation as a significant way to offset that.

What kinds of counseling does MentorcliQ offer to people who feel lost while working from home?

In talking about this phenomenon, I start with a real definition of the problem. One definition of the problem, from a mentoring perspective, is when you are working in a remote work environment that "water cooler" is not there. The phrase that I use when talking about it is that "in the absence of happenstance, you need to create circumstance." By that I mean those water cooler conversations are happenstance. It may be you're walking down the hall and you bump into someone and you strike up a conversation. But that happenstance creates the opportunity for either a business conversation or a relationship development.

When that happenstance isn't there, organizations are well-served to become more explicit about it and create the circumstances for those interactions to happen. The mentoring relationship is one of the most perfect ways to do that. When you think about the relationships that are had in the workplace, the vast majority of those relationships are there because they ensure to the benefit of the organization. Your boss, your colleagues, all of those relationships are there for the benefit of the company. The one exception you could say is human resources. With that said, that relationship is 50 percent or greater for the benefit of the company, whereas with the mentoring relationship, there is a benefit to the company, no doubt about it, but at the core of that relationship is the mentee. The mentee is there for their progression through the organization. It is uniquely one of those relationships that is there for the employee and participant in the program. So between the fact that mentoring makes explicit and promotes the idea of having a relationship that is not just work-oriented, it creates and drives a relationship where an individual can become more connected to their colleagues and thus also back to the organization that is sponsoring the mentoring program.

What the Sixers are getting with

The Sixers acquired the veteran superstar guard on Saturday from the Minnesota Timberwolves.

The Jimmy Butler saga with the Minnesota Timberwolves finally came to an end on Saturday afternoon.

According to ESPN's Adrian Wojnarowski and Zach Lowe, the Sixers have traded forwards Dario Saric and Robert Covington, along with veteran guard Jerryd Bayless and a 2020 second-round pick, to the Timberwolves for Butler and second-year big man Justin Patton. The deal will be completed today.

Wojnarowski also added in his report that the Sixers and Jimmy Butler are fully expected to reach a deal on a long-term contract next summer. Philadelphia has a ton of money coming off of the books next offseason and could offer Butler a five-year max contract worth $190 million.

The 29-year-old Butler has a player option for next season worth $19 million, but will more than likely opt out. Nevertheless, this power move by new Sixers general manager Elton Brand to acquire him definitely came out of left field as no one thought that the disgruntled superstar guard would be heading to Philly.

Instead, all signs pointed to Butler potentially going to the Houston Rockets at one point, or the Miami Heat, but those trade talks reportedly broke down in the 11th hour.

Last month, Lowe reported that Butler "had eyes" for the Sixers among his preferred trade destinations (Brooklyn Nets, Los Angeles Clippers and Heat). However, Philadelphia, at the time, expressed no interest in trading for the two-way superstar guard.

The two teams first had conversations about a trade back in September, when Butler made it clear that he did not want to be in Minnesota anymore.

During those trade

conversations, the Timberwolves reportedly wanted reigning Rookie of the Year award-winner Ben Simmons in exchange for Butler. The Sixers — rightfully so — ended those negotiations on the spot.

However, this trade works out for both parties involved. In regards to the Timberwolves, they get rid of a disgruntled player and in return get a young forward in Dario Saric, who can stretch the floor, and a 3-and-D wing player in Covington, who will be a perfect fit in Tom Thibodeau's system.

But when it comes to the Sixers, they finally have their star that they had been searching for since summertime. It was not easy for them, as Philly came up short in both the LeBron James and Kawhi Leonard sweepstakes.

However, Butler will help the Sixers out immensely on both sides of the floor. Last season, the 29-year-old averaged 22.2 points, 5.3 rebounds and 4.9 assists in 36.7 minutes per game. He also shot 47.4 percent from the field and 35 percent from three-point range on 3.4 attempts per game.

Through 10 games this season, Butler has picked up where he left off last season, averaging 21.3 points, 5.2 rebounds and 4.3 assists in 36.1 minutes per game. He is shooting 47.1 percent from the field and an outstanding 37.8 percent from distance on 4.5 attempts per game.

Outside of the standard stats, Butler has a career offensive rating (ORtg) of 119 and defensive rating (DRtg) of 105. This means that he will give you a ton of offensive production while also locking down whomever he is defending.

Along those same lines, the Sixers are also getting a player who can not only create his own offense but is a threat in isolation situations. This was an issue that plagued the Sixers last season during their run to the playoffs and has also reared its ugly head in the early part of this season.

Butler was pretty good in isolation last season, averaging 2.4 points per game. While this is not a huge amount in comparison to players such as LeBron James and James Harden, it was more than what any other Sixer did.

Ultimately, it should be interesting to see how the rest of this season plays out for the Sixers. If they thought that expectations were already high coming into this year, well, they just got higher with the acquisition of Butler.

Jimmy Butler will give the Sixers a boost immediately, which will especially help third-year big man Joel Embiid. But there will now be more pressure on Simmons and Markelle Fultz to also become offensive playmakers, to supplement the production of Covington and Saric. Regardless, the Sixers are going for it.
